Baylor College of Medicine’s Huffington Center on Aging is recognized worldwide as one of the premier centers on aging. The creation of the center grew out of Dr. Robert Luchi’s geriatrics sabbatical in Edinburgh in 1978 and Roy M. and Phyllis Gough Huffington formally endowing the center in 1988. In the past twenty-five years, the center has had many outstanding accomplishments including the prestigious distinction as a designated Center of Excellence by the John A. Hartford Foundation.

The center is committed to improving the quality of life for individuals as they age through leading-edge research, delivering healthcare through Baylor affiliated clinics, hospitals and other health service-oriented institutions and providing education and training for students of health professions, current healthcare professionals and for the community at large.
