ACHIEVING THE AMAZING

When natural disasters strike, Baylor College of Medicine is always ready to lend a hand. From Ecuador and Haiti to China, Indonesia and even our own backyard, we help in many ways, big and small.

After Hurricane Katrina devastated New Orleans, Baylor doctors, along with other local healthcare providers, staffed an interim clinic near the evacuees’ temporary home in the Houston Astrodome. Then knowing that Tulane Medical students were without a facility and in danger of losing an entire year in their studies, our respective leaders came together to ensure the students could continue their studies on our campus at Baylor. Tulane faculty came along to teach, and for the following year, two medical schools called Baylor home.

Look in the Medical and Science section every Monday and visit bcm.edu to see how Baylor is achieving the amazing in our community.
