In big and small ways, everyone’s life is touched by ethics. At Baylor College of Medicine, where we treat patients, conduct scientific research and educate medical and science professionals, ethics is one of our highest priorities.

At Baylor’s Center for Medical Ethics and Health Policy, an expert group of professionals does everything from consulting on ethical issues in patient care at area hospitals to weighing in on global issues like protecting patient privacy in the new world of online health data. The Ethics Track teaches Baylor medical students the responsible practice of medicine. Our ethics team also works diligently to bring the importance of medical ethics to the community, through events that focus on the decisions, issues and values affecting the general public as they relate to medical ethics and health policy.

Look in the Medical and Science section every Monday and visit bcm.edu to see how Baylor is achieving the amazing in our community.
