Since World War II, Baylor College of Medicine has served those who help ensure America’s independence by training physicians who provide care for active and retired military service members. These heroes have received care in both war and peacetime, on foreign shores, and right here in Houston at the Michael E. DeBakey VA Medical Center—Baylor’s first teaching hospital and the first VA hospital in the country to form a partnership with a medical school.

This past May, Baylor continued that commitment by hosting a military commissioning ceremony for two outstanding Baylor medical school graduates. The officers will go on to fulfill their residency requirement on a military base, and will join the ongoing mission to preserve our nation’s freedom.

Look in the Medical and Science section every Monday and visit bcm.edu to see how Baylor is achieving the amazing in our community.