We salute the "Arts in Aging" as a complement to a good life long lived. In this 22nd Edition, we again feature the works of current artists ranging in age from septuagenarians to nonagenarians. The scenes and people they painted depict life in Europe, the Americas, and the Far East; the eclectic look of the calendar is indicative of the wonderful differences in people worldwide. Goethe correctly said that "Science and Art belong to the whole World and the barriers of nationality vanish before them." Born in the first half of the last century, these artists remind us daily that older people make important contributions to the quality of our lives. Their creativity is timeless and the beauty they perceived, we see in these wonderful works.

Abbott's Arcanum, HJ Bott (1933-); private collection, Houston, Texas

The Winner, Eyvone A. Stricklin (1943-); collection of the artist, Montgomery, Texas

Singing Birds, Beth Muir (1944-); private collection, Manhattan Beach, California

Skipperfly, 1, Arthur Turner (1940-); Moody Gallery, Houston, Texas

Naptime, Kirby Attwell (1935-); collection of the artist, Houston, Texas
Arts in Aging Calendar
Huffington Center on Aging

We salute the “Arts in Aging” as a complement to a good life long lived. In this 22nd Edition, we again feature the works of current artists ranging in age from septuagenarians to nonagenarians. The scenes and people they painted reflect the beauty that the eyes saw, the beautiful differences in people worldwide. Goethe correctly said that “Science and Art belong to the whole World and the barriers of nationality vanish before them.” Born in the first half of the last century, these artists remind us daily that older people make important contributions to the quality of our lives. Their creativity is timeless and the beauty their eyes saw, we see in these wonderful works.